 Cleveland Nights
 The Prologue
 From certain cultured homes in Cleveland town, To Erie's blue, historic waves came down
 Three youthful couples, in the month of June, To spend in Gordon Park an afternoon. They came to breathe awhile the perfect air
 That winds from off the lake keep ever there, And after they had sauntered two by two, Laughing and jesting, as young people do,
 Cross grove-encircled lawns, through glen and glade, In broad walks darkened by the oak trees shade,
 They reached the shore, and under willow trees Sat talking, charmed by birds, the deep, the breeze. Northward they saw the blue waves meet the sky
 And laughed to see fish leap and catch a fly; Themselves oft caught by water-fowl that o'er The waters ev'ry summer fishing soar. Eastward they looked; still rolled the waters blue
 Save where a point of land hid their view. Mere sand and trees, but distance, lake, and sun, Made it appear a scene by magic done. About the Publisher
