Excerpt: .are negligible, but in belt wheels they must be carefully considered. The cylinder must be thoroughly cleaned in the ports.Steam and exhaust chests and bore are blown out with steam or air. All core sand left in the casting or grit blown into it in transportation or erecting must be removed. The throttle valve should be put on, making the engine ready for the pipe connections to the boilers. The piston, rod and crosshead should be put in and lined up. The guide should have marks at each end to indicate the length of the stroke and the clearances in the cylinder by bringing a mark on the crosshead line on line with them, as in Fig. 184. This must be verified by moving crosshead and piston from one end to the other until the piston strikes the heads. If the piston rod has a threaded end, it should never be screwed into the crosshead with pipe tongs; that would leave deep and ineradicable marks on the rod and ruin it. A stout rope should be doubled and wound a sufficient number of times around the rod to give it a good hold, and a bar inserted in the loop; then, using the rod as fulcrum, it is comparatively easy to turn the piston rod. A piece of soft sheet copper inserted between bar and rod will protect the latter from retting bruised. The arrangement is shown in Fig. 185. The common practice is...
