At a very early age he was sent to a school kept by a man named Malone, who seemed to possess, from Moore s own account of him, but little aptitude for teaching. When he was old enough it was determined that he should go to the best school in Dublin - the Grammar School of Samuel Whyte, who had been the early instructor of the celebrated Brinsley Sheridan There is little doubt but that Moore s genius first became developed under the fostering care of this master, who had warmly been...
